rope has produced efforts upon American benevolence that would have taken years to bring about, if indeed anything but war could have produced at all, People back from the country at the end of September were confronted with appeals for the Red Cross in vast numbers. Much was given Then came an outery from charities at home, privately from churches and missionary secieties, not protesting against help noing to the Belgians, but reminding that there are sufferers at home. Immediately givers learned of needs at home as they had not learned before, and leaders in henevolence began to make plans.

Now in a score of cities, chiefly the smaller anse not yet provided with them, charity organization secieties have been formed, and the task of putting system into giving has been entered on. In middle west cities still creater advances have been made. Public committees have been formed, treasurers selected, enumeners chosen, a sum to meet probable needs has been fixed upon, and men and women are giving whole days, certainly whole evenings, to the task of collecting money. Preparations for the event are made by the newspaners by publishing news and needs. Civers are asked to remain at home, and open doors when bells ring expecting to subscribe.

Reports from older and integer cities in the east show that in them better systems of civing have been informed of real conditions while the givers have tremendously increased in numbers. Under old conditions people within the churches gave $2 of every $2 to general benevience quiside of their churches. Now the proportion is said to be fairer.
